Chapter 1 by Riggio Scoffic

"I need a dictionary," said Larry as he pushed his laptop computer away. "What's the best way to go about this?" he asked himself aloud.

The algorithms and calculations floated by in his head. He stood from his chair and began to look down on into the glimmers of light coming down from the light bulb being reflected out through his glass of water which sat on the table. He moved the glass which in turn moved the moving light. He starred at it a moment and thought to himself.

It was all becoming obvious now.

Larry sat back down and retrieved the laptop from flowers foot away. The destination was now. I was the time of being.

Larry google'd for the websites, 'Wiktionary' and 'Vocabulary.com'. He decided he would write stories about the words he'd learned, but how?

How could he begin, to begin?

He arose feeling invigorated.
